Herman Kurrelmeier

Evaluating – Deliverables Reflection Questions

1. What I most enjoyed about evaluating is looking back on the experience and seeing what I could improve on and what I and my team did well at with this project. What I liked least is evaluating my group members, although I was being honest, I never like to talk negatively about someone.

2. The biggest challenge I encountered whilst evaluating was reflecting on myself. Although it is very helpful to self-evaluate, it can be difficult to be unbiased about myself and wholly objective without letting emotion get in the way.

3. To complete this project deliverable, I utilized my ability to fairly and mostly (un-biased) evaluate myself as well as my group members. I also took the information from all the surveys and compiled them into an excel document to see any correlation between all the data that we received. I used that data to help me with my evaluations and last assignments with this class/project.

4. I think it would be very interesting to evaluate as a tech career option: to be able to be presented new and/or upcoming technology and evaluate it for flaws and characteristics that could be changed to improve it for usability and other aspects. Although it would be very interesting, I want to go more into the actual coding, development, and implementation of software and technology and I know evaluation will be a part of that but it won’t the staple of my career.