Career Possibilities
Research Report

By: Joey Siegel
Key Findings
Top Values

• Wealth
  - Wealth holds such high value to me because it is the strongest factor of what defines success. I describe it as a result of hard work, passion, and commitment towards whatever I put my mind and focus into. Wealth is more than just obtaining money, it’s about being able to provide for my family one day, helping those in need, and setting an example to others of what it takes to become successful. Once wealth is obtained, life turns into a cycle of devoting your time, energy, love, and money into whatever you are passionate about to help bring the same degree of success and wealth to those you chose to share your knowledge and experience with.

• Achievements
  - Achievements are a top value of mine because I use them as a measurement of how successful I am. Without achievements you would have no goals, and without goals you will have no desire to be your best and challenge yourself to push your limits of what you can accomplish and achieve. It’s important to remember that achievements are not ultimate goals, but rather they’re stepping stones of it takes to see your full potential of what you can do and achieve max success. Achievements are rewarding, sure, but it’s crucial to set goals for many of them, because they should be used to only drive you harder and harder to ultimately reach limits that you would have never expected yourself to reach. Achievements are unquestionably one of my top values because I seek to achieve many of them, and the more I accomplish, the more I will expect out of myself.

• Responsibility
  - Responsibility is a top value of mine because I’ve learned that responsibility goes a long way in life. What I mean by this is that if one does not stay true to his or her word, then it instantly makes them discreditable to those around them. Responsibility is one of the most important values in the world of business because it is the key factor of what makes a relationship work or not. Agreements, relationships, and friendships are all centered around the value of responsibility as those that are responsible stand out to others as someone that they would like to be in close contact with and can trust with big decisions or responsibilities.
Interests Overview

1. Creative Production

The results of my CareerLeader report suggest that Creative Production is my highest interest as the feedback suggests that I am 55% more interested in this compared to other business professionals. I am not surprised to see this because I feel as if this holds true to who I am with my personality and beliefs. I’m always striving to push myself and reach new limits with whatever I am focused on even if that means taking risks to get a bigger reward. I’m always thinking about new ideas and new ways to handle the given situation at hand and I truly enjoy thinking outside the box to gain an advantage over my competitors whenever possible. This interest fits me the most because I am a creative thinker, which means I like to brainstorm new unorthodox ideas that might not be commonly thought about by the majority of people. Creative production has its pros and cons, as I tend to be far more excited about starting projects rather than finishing them because I am always looking for a new perspective on creating something new and unthought of by others.

2. Quantitative Analysis

Results of my CareerLeader report suggest that Quantitative Analysis is my second highest interest with its score of 41. While the report suggests that I am interested in this 59% less than most other business professionals, I find this hard to believe. I like to take an analytical approach to nearly everything I put my time and effort into as without knowing the numbers I would not know the success rates and outcomes of what others have done to succeed and fail. I’m highly interested in using technology to further advance my research with the topic at hand as I believe that using this will only lead to giving myself more of an advantage over my competitors. Analyzing data and going over the numbers appeals to me and fits me because I enjoy taking the extra time to be sure of something before I put all my time and passion into it, as without this I would feel as if I would be doing myself a disservice by not doing the necessary research on a particular topic. Building computer models allows me to weigh out different possible outcomes to different situations, which I believe gives me a significant advantage in the work force over my competitors.
Personality Type

What It means to be a Guardian?

- Guardians make up 45% of society and for good reason. Guardians tend to have very caring, hard working, and trusting characteristics which can prove to be the most beneficial to companies in the long scheme of things. Something I pride about myself most is my care for others and their well being, and the Keirsey report completely reflects that. The report shows that one of the key characteristics in a Guardian is their tendency to be loyal to whoever is important to them. I can significantly relate myself with this because I dedicate all of my time and energy into maintaining strong and healthy relationships with whoever I am involved with, whether that would be my mate or business partner, I will treat that person with respect and always remain a dependable source to them. I know that my personality is very caring, but it is also very hard working and dependable, both of which are mentioned as key characteristics of Guardians. These characteristics hold such high value to me because I enjoy putting 110% effort into any challenge presented to me. Whether someone is counting on me to produce efficient and effective work for us as a group, or if I am working on a particular project on my own, it does not matter, because I will always be working hard to seek the best out of myself and what I can accomplish. Guardians also have a characteristic of seeking out justice, which correlates entirely to my personality because integrity is very important to me and I believe that following rules and laws are vital towards making a positive impact on society. Seeking out justice has led me to have strong interest in practicing law following college. Lastly, the value of camaraderie found in guardians holds high value to me because I understand the importance of forming groups to hear different opinions and measures taken to accomplish a successful outcome. Learning to take constructive criticism, learn, and grow from others has proven to be wildly successful in breaking bad habits and looking into ideas with a possible better approach. My personality tends to rely sometimes a little to heavily on taking ideas from the group without really analyzing my own thoughts to see which one would be more beneficial in the end result.
Finance Overview

1. This major fits with my values, interests, and personality because it involves making highly analytical decisions centered around risk and return of investments. The values of finance match up with my own personal values as its ultimate goal is to receive the greatest amount of return on investments centered around doing it responsibly through accomplishing one achievement at a time. My top values include wealth, achievements, and responsibility, all of which are proven to be vital towards being successful in the finance world. Next, this major fits my interests because it will allow me to be creative in managing investments and individuals in my own personal way and it will allow me to use my analytical skills in weighing out all options of investment returns and using the right methods towards accomplishing a successful return on the money of my clients or business. Lastly, this major fits my personality because it requires a lot of responsibility from its professionals and Guardians such as myself tend to have very hard working, loyal, and dependable personality types that have the desire to make the ones they work with or for better and more successful.

2. On average, the Kelley School of Business Finance major will make $65,300 coming out of college which is higher than the average pay of the general bachelor's degree in finance earning an average of $52,800 back in 2012. This major also provides extraordinary internship opportunities all around the world through their wide variety of connections in the business world. The finance major is known for its possible career opportunities such as being a stock broker, insurance agent, financial analyst at a corporation and many more.

3. I believe that the two best fitting career choices for this major would involve being a stock broker or an insurance agent. Both resonate with me because I ha
Sport Management Overview
Professional Sales Overview