Mission (Educ X-150)
Lorenzo Secci
This project was to describe what my mission was and what are my overall goals and values in life. This was not a group project, for I just did this by myself.

Mission Statement:

   My mission is to give back to my family, especially my parents, what I earned and accomplished in them believing in me. I realized the huge opportunity my parents have given me in sending me to college, now I need to utilize that for future opportunities. I will get myself an occupation of which I will put all efforts into and thankfully pay back my parents what they gave me when I was a child plus more. I will do this while being humble, scholarly, caring, loving, and always remembering where I came from.

   The first of my personal values is to be humble. This is one of the most important qualities in my eyes, and I think every good and strong man should have. To show low modest of your own importance and be nice to people is a way better quality to have than being an arrogant person. Whenever I accomplish a goal in life, I do not go out and brag about it, I stay true to myself and go into my humble state. My dad has always showed me how to be a humble man, as he carries my family through life because he is the only source income in the family, and not bragging or complaining about this is one of the best qualities he has.

   The second of my person values is to be scholarly. This is an extremely important quality every man must have. If your parents invest in you to go to school, it should be your duty to perform well and excel in school. My parents have always put me in private school my whole life and have always had to pay tuition for myself and my three younger siblings. They have invested over hundreds of thousands of dollars for my siblings and I to get an education, now it is our job to use that as a golden opportunity to be successful in life.
The third of my personal values is to be caring. This is another important value in my life because I think every man should demonstrate some level of kindness and concern for other people. When it is out of a person's reach to control themselves, it shows a lot about a man when he is caring and understanding to that person. Showing concern for others and helping other people out is a very important thing to do when trying to accomplish your goals because you never know when you will end up needing help from someone else.
