My Vision for America

I see a peaceful and prosperous America. I also see a country where the citizens have a right to liberty and where everybody is treated equally without any discrimination whatsoever. America can be more prosperous than it is now, especially with the fact that it can enhance its military operations and become a superpower. I have a vision that will enable every young youth, regardless of the level of education or gender, can get a job depending on qualifications and not appearance. Everyone will have the chance to enjoy equality rules from all aspects. In the future, Americans will see past racism, and black lives, as well as those of people of color, will matter. Where race will not be considered as a factor to favor other people and ignore others. By equality, I mean that individuals will recognize differences in people, and learn to appreciate others for who they are and also for the cultures that they come from. A diverse American culture can be compared to a salad bowl. This means that every person is appreciated for who they are. This fact will enable Americans to love each other. It will also enable the understanding that different people bring different things to the table. Encouraging diversity will enable American citizens to understand others that are different from them and to collaborate with them in building the country. Equality also means that men will stop viewing women as inferior, and women will be given a chance to rise and take part in economic activities that will enable America to grow.

Liberty is also a very important aspect that I wish for America. Every person should have a right to choose which path of life he wants to take, as long as it does not negatively affect the welfare of others. Freedom to express one’s feelings and views should be respected. However, by giving this freedom, individuals should not use this as an opportunity to judge others and hate speech should be regarded as a human rights violation. Alexander Hamilton, who is one of the founders of the United States, had a vision that America would be rich and prosperous. He supported global economy and went on to create the bank of America, whose main function was to control social funds. To add to this, Hamilton preferred to get into an alliance with Britain rather than France. This is because Britain and America share the same capitalism and elitism views. Capitalism enhances people to work hard towards reaching a certain goal. It is a state where the weak are not manipulated by the strong, nor the poor by the rich. Hamilton was for the idea that every American should work hard to better himself, thus abandoning communism. This view has gone hand in hand with my vision of a prosperous America. I also agree with Hamilton that liberty should reach a certain point where it can be controlled, because too much of it will lead to democracy being threatened. Too much freedom will lead to people thinking that they are in charge, which is bad for a country.

Thomas Jefferson is also another important person whose vision quite fits mine. He also had this vision of America is a democratic, prosperous and liberal nation. Although he was not for capitalism, he valued peace and harmony. Being a Republican, he strived towards raising the living standards of people in America to normal rather than poor because he argues that the country could not move forward nor develop if there were still poor people who were unable to pay their bills or even afford their basic needs. I support the fact that Jefferson had this dream of eradicating poverty in America, which is very noble. I feel that no state should be comfortable having its citizens living in absolute poverty, and it is, therefore, important to live in a poverty-free America.

George Washington also had a great vision for America. He was the first American president. His aim was to make America democratic and prosperous. It is evident that the three people I have talked about had the same good visions for America, and wished the best for their country. Washington supported the idea of Hamilton concerning the bank of America. It shows that they valued money, as a very important tool in America’s future. The fact that George Washington resigned after two terms in office tells a lot. It shows that he valued equality and balance of power. It shows that he was ready to let another candidate rule the country. He put the needs of the county first before his own, which emulates what a true leader should do.

Raising tax for rich people, in my opinion, is not fair. I am saying this because these people worked hard to get where they are, and it would be very unfair to tax them more simply because they are successful. Both Washington and Jefferson also thought raising taxes for rich people was unfair, for they were fighting to see a country that exercised equal rights to every citizen. Therefore, raising taxes would be discrimination, which was not good. Washington supported the very people who were vulnerable to rules meant to exploit them because whether a person is rich or poor, he is an American citizen, and before the law, all should be treated equally.
